SUNDAY SCHOOL AT BELLE GLADE

Next Sunday individual record card will be kept for each pupil at the Community M. E. Sunday school, which meets at the Legion hall at 9:45. Points are given for attendance, being on time, a student lesson, bringing an offering and the lesson helps. Those procuring a record of 80 per cent are to receive a bible with good print and binding as a reward. It is the purpose of the Sunday school to provide a bible of which the pupil can be justly proud, which will help him not only in this life, but come. There were forty present early to prepare him for the life to last Sunday but there should be many more in a community of this size. Classes are provided for all ages. Come and worship with us.

The basketball team, both boys and girls, motored over to Pompano to play two games last Friday night. The girls' game was a tie, 8 to 8; the boys won with a score of 12 to 10. They both were hard fought games. We are expecting them to come over next month and we want everybody to see it.

The Boynton boys' and girls' team came over Tuesday night and the Boynton boys defeated the Pahokee boys 15 to 12. The girls' score was 13 to 13. Both the games were rough from start to finish. We hope to put up a better fight next time.

MATERIAL FOR THOUGHT

Do readers think as they look over daily papers? Is there anything in the papers to stimulate thought? Let's test it. At hand is a copy of an evening paper of Friday, January 24. A heading, "Two Planes Take Five Physicians To Canal Zone." The planes are to stop at Havana and at Merida, Yucatan. Thought: The Mayans lived and built pyramids in Yucatan; they vanished—why? Probably disease swept through the population. They were a wise people, and had they possessed the modern knowledge of medicine they might have maintained their civilization through the Spaniards and themselves discovered the Old World and conquered the Spaniards. There is a thought for an imaginative novelist.

Some historians attribute the decline of the Roman empire to malaria, spread by mosquitoes from the marshes adjacent to the city set on the seven hills. The word malaria is of Latin origin—mal, bad; aria, bad air long thought to be the cause of illness. Night air was thought to be poisonous, and windows were closed to keep out the air, and this caused sickness instead of preventing it. The hardy Germanic tribes, who had no possession of the Roman capital were not afraid of night air; they were out-of-doors people; they went into Rome and survived. The population of ancient Rome might have been wiped out completely as they were the Central American Mayans.

Malaria is still a problem. A heading in this paper of Friday reads, "South Florida Malaria Carrier Doesn't Thrive on Paris Green." The malaria-carrying mosquito is the anopheles quadrimaculatus. Observers note that it dies when it feeds on the poison that is spread to kill potato bugs. Insect-proof people slightly of scientists and "book learning," yet it was scientists who recorded their observations in books so physicians could learn that malaria is cured by quinine. "Five Planes Take Physicians To Canal Zone," as the newspaper heading says, to communicate knowledge of modern medical practice—scientists carrying "book learning," exchanging views, and possibly preventing America from being depopulated as Mayan cities were depopulated.

Speaking of Rome: This paper we are looking over reprints from the New York World an editorial, "The Pope's Encyclical." The Pope of the Roman Catholic church says: "We confirm our previous declaration and sacred canons forbidding Catholic children to attend anti-Catholic, neutral or mixed schools, by the latter being mixed with those schools open equally to Catholics and non-Catholics." This encyclical will be a campaign document if the Democratic party renominates ex-Governor Alfred E. Cury as governor for president. It will be cited as evidence that the high-up Catholics fight the public school system, and it will be said: If Governor Smith is a good Catholic he shares the pope's view of the public school and if he does share that view he is not a good American citizen.

The whole system of education in the world is certain to be open up for amendment. It is likely to be overthrown. The average college graduate of today is an inferior product as compared with the college graduate of a generation ago," according to Dr. G. J. Loring, dean of the graduate school of art and literature of the University of Chicago. The paper we are looking over makes the editorial comment: "Concentration on football and other non-essential activities has undoubtedly had its effect on the spirit of the college. Sooner or later the nation's educators will be echoing Dr. Loring's plaint loudly."

There was prospect in Palm Beach county that schools would close for lack of funds—"for what? To hire coaches for high school football teams?" The Florida Power Light Company are trying to run politics and the government, the article says. Well, certainly some one must look after the running of the country, and if ignorant and prejudiced persons, like those who criticize "book learning" and scientists, can't do it, nor the college student who wasted his time on football, why not let the "power trust" do it? The power companies want prosperity for the whole population, so their customers can pay their bills by the 10th of the month.

Daily newspapers have a few columns of editorial comment, and several of them make "short news." These two insignificant make a significant. Daily papers give readers just exactly what the readers want. Editors are not training their students to think; they are training one part of their students to play football and another part of the students to cheer the team. Yet for industry and government to be carried on, some persons must think.

The common news of any issue of any daily paper furnishes food for thought to those who will think. The news of the world can be brought into relation with highways and automobiles and the monthly electric light bills. Is any voter made better qualified to elect competent men to office to fix the rate by reading the base ball score and the racing chart?

A LAW WITH AN "IF"

While the Florida land boom was on countries and special districts sold many millions of dollars worth of lands, and when the land boom collapsed a condition existed that many persons thought could be corrected by legislative action. The 1929 session of the Florida legislature very properly undertook that task.

This is as accurate a statement as is consistent with brevity; no more elaboration of it is necessary than to recall that the condition existed in the last months of the administration of Governor Martin and that Governor Martin called attention to the flood of Florida lands when he discussed the Everglades drainage situation. It was a condition that called for collaboration by Governor Martin's successor for its correction.

The larger part of the bonded indebtedness had been created for the construction of roads and the improvement of real estate, and much of it had been created by the action of freeholders voting in special road district elections. The State of Florida as a state has no bonded indebtedness, counties and districts having assumed the entire load.

Some roads had been built by the State Road Department from the proceeds of a tax on gasoline and a very large program of state road building so financed was being executed when the land boom collapsed. It was not unnatural that taxpayers in heavily indebted counties and special road districts should think they should share in the benefits from the gasoline tax, and it was their right to do so.

Out of this state of affairs there came a proposal which was later embodied in bills that were introduced at the 1929 session of the Florida legislature. After discussion and amendment these bills were enacted; the complete execution of the laws was held up until the supreme court decided how they were to be administered, and now the court has announced its decision.

The gas tax law, described as chapter 14575, in this effort provided for four classes of taxes and undertook the reorganization of a form of distribution to help the counties and special road districts that had assumed the burden of bonds for roads. A complete reorganization was frankly confessed to be an experiment, as the legislature wrote this paragraph into the law:

"If the foregoing apportionment of either the second or third gas tax shall be held unconstitutional or ineffective for any reason, then the apportionment herein provided for the other of said two taxes."

The paragraph above refers to the "second and third gas tax." The second tax (of one cent a gallon) was to be to the counties in the proportion collected in each county. The third tax was to go to the counties on a basis of their bonded indebtedness for roads and the bonded indebtedness of their special road and bridge districts. The supreme court decision sustains this tax in part and rejects it in part—it allows the counties to apply that part of the tax to their county road bonds as is collected from sales in their own counties but it does not allow the use of tax from one county's sales to apply on the indebtedness of another county.

The legislature did not definitely adopt the so-called Brown-Cummer pooling plan; what the legislature did was to authorize that part of the law to their county road bonds and to let the law and has interpreted the law and declared the manner of administration.

The representatives in the 1929 session from small counties and heavily bonded counties saw the import of the paragraph that is quoted above—they understood exactly what it meant, as well as did the representatives from the large and populous counties in which the consumption of gasoline was heavy and the total tax collection large.

Under one interpretation by the supreme court certain counties would benefit more largely than other counties but the identity of the particular counties affected could not be established until the court did declare the constitutionality of one of the several phases of the law. With this clear understanding of the meaning of the words and the consequences of the act, the bills were passed, and now are to be administered as law.

The decision of the supreme court is sound and equitable. The Florida road-districts that brought about exorbitant taxes by the voting of huge bond issues for unwarranted road construction have been condemned, the improvident counties have been taught a lesson, the well-managed counties have been rewarded, and the larger part of the taxes on gasoline will stay where it originates.

THE PARDON MILL GRINDS

Applications for pardons have been received in large numbers, a circular letter from the Florida State Board of Pardons says: "At the last meeting of the board more than 1,000 applications were entered. The necessary clerical work which must be accomplished before the meeting causes considerable expense due to the fact that applications and other papers were late in being filed. The board has asked all concerned to cooperate in plans to expedite the duties of the pardon officials."

Apply some common sense and human understanding to this thing:

Pardons are asked for because pardons are granted; if no pardons were granted few would be asked for. The more pardons are asked for, the more applications there will be. If less pardons are granted there will be less applications.

The pardoning system in Florida is bad. In the first place, the board should not be composed of any state official except the governor.

Judges, learned in the law, impose sentences, and the supreme court and set aside their action is not logical. It is worse than asinine, for asses are merely stupid and stubborn.

The whole theory of pardon boards is wrong. Pardon is an act of clemency, mercy, and arises out of individual sentimental impulses, not susceptible to logic. An individual may, occasionally, exercise clemency, or properly possess power to correct an error in the administration of law, but this does not call for action through a board of state executives.
